Director and/or Performance Maker (Open Rank)

The Department of Drama at Stanford University is seeking applicants for a tenure-line faculty position as Director and/or Performance Maker. Areas of expertise include, but are not limited to: directing, performance making, design and/or devised theatre. M.F.A., Ph.D or comparable experience required. Candidates must have a strong record of publishing, professional performance experience and teaching. Applicants will be expected to teach courses at the graduate and undergraduate levels. Term of appointment would begin September 1, 2010.

Applicants should send their curriculum vitae, bibliography, and a brief statement describing the goals and achievements of their work, and two brief course descriptions (course title, rationale, and the names of three to five works to be considered in each class). Candidates at the assistant professor level should also send names and addresses of three references to:

Professor Alice Rayner
Search Committee Chair
