WHAT ARE STANFORD UNIVERSITY WIRELESS GUEST ACCOUNTS? Stanford hosts many visitors on any given day. Some come to campus as potential students with their families, some are vendors on campus for meetings, some are alumni returning to see how things have changed. Many visitors have inquired about guest access to wireless resources.

Stanford offers a solution that is now available for IT Services-managed wireless services. Anyone with a SUNet ID can set up a temporary guest ID for access to the wireless network on campus. Go to wirelessguest.stanford.edu, specify an ID and password and how long the guest will need access (up to seven days). The guest ID is immediately activated. Guest IDs can be used by one individual or by a group. Just give the username and password to the guest(s) and they'll be able to access the network.

Guests will be prompted for the username and password the first time they open their web browser. After logging in, they'll be able to freely browse the Internet and easily access web sites and email. During the (up to) seven-day period of access, each login session requires re-login after four hours.

Note: Some schools and departments on campus provide their own wireless networks; these networks are not managed by IT Services. The Wireless Guest account applies only to the Campus Wide Wireless Network managed by IT Services.

WHY SHOULD I USE THIS SERVICE? The Wireless Guest service is a quick and easy way to give visitors wireless network access. If you have a valid SUNet ID, you can sponsor any number of guests on the wireless net.

WHAT DOES IT COST? Wireless Guest access is provided free of charge.

HOW CAN I FIND OUT MORE? You can find out more about Wireless Guest service at wirelessnet.stanford.edu/visitors.html. You can sponsor guests by going to wirelessguest.stanford.edu.
