SASS is a weekly seminar series led by students at SLAC. Our lunchtime gatherings are informal and are meant to provide an atmosphere where students feel comfortable asking questions and learning about the diverse theoretical and experimental research areas at SLAC and beyond.

SASS is currently the only student organization based at SLAC so we also serve as a venue for students to meet each other and establish a critical mass of young people at the lab.

Get involved!

We welcome all students including sprightly first-years learning about research groups, visiting students from other departments and universities, science writers, summer students, and veteran graduate students wrapping up their theses. We have even been treated by SLAC alumni returning to discuss their current adventures. SASS periodically holds organizational meetings to brainstorm future discussion topics. Come support your peers and consider sharing your own research or other scientific interest. We are always looking for new speakers and SASS is a great way to hone your presentation skills in a relaxed environment.

To sign up for our mailing list, just send an email to majordomo@slac.stanford.edu with "subscribe got-sass" (without quotes) in the body of the email.

Check out the schedule of upcoming speakers posted on our website.
