

Phillip M. Gin

Director, Stanford Conference Services

As Director of Stanford Conference Services, Phillip Gin contributes over thirteen years of collegiate conference experience and a lifetime of commitment to the fields of hospitality and education.

In prior roles at California State University, Northridge and Allegheny College, Phil has served in various capacities overseeing conferences and other hospitality programs. He also coordinated marketing efforts for hospitality operations, including conferences, catering, and dining services. In addition to his background in collegiate hospitality, Phil spent his youth and much of his adult life in the food service industry learning valuable lessons along the way.

An active leader in the industry, Phil is a member of a number of professional organizations, including the Association of Collegiate Conference and Event Directors - International (ACCED-I), for which he has served in a variety of leadership positions including service on the Board and as the organization's Treasurer. Phil has also been a member of the Society of Government Meeting Planners, local Convention and Visitors Bureaus, and many other professional associations related to his work.

Phil's educational background includes a Bachelors degree from UCLA; a Masters in Educational Leadership and Policy Studies, and a teaching credential. Continuing his efforts to advance the industry, Phil has presented to colleagues and published articles in trade journals on numerous topics. Phil's commitment to being an educator and a host for the University fuels his ongoing dedication to the field of collegiate conference and meeting planning.
