

CONTRIBUTORS

CHING-FEN HU is currently a graduate student at the Jackson School of International Studies, University of Washington. He received his B.A. in Political Science from National Taiwan University, Taipei, Taiwan in 1981. He has also received an M.A. in Journalism from Ohio State University in Columbus, Ohio, 1983. His primary research interest is China's democratic movement.

DIANE FU is a junior at the University of Minnesota-Twin Cities who is currently studying abroad at Beijing University, China. She is majoring in Global Studies and Political Science with a minor in Psychology. She has received the Undergraduate Research Opportunities Grant sponsored by the University of Minnesota College of Liberal Arts. This grant provided her the opportunity to collaborate with Political Science Professor Daniel Kelliher on this research project. She would like to thank Professor Kelliher for his encouragement and his incredible mentoring. Her paper was also chosen for presentation at the 2004 National Undergraduate Research Conference held in Indianapolis last spring.

ALBERT CHANG is a junior majoring in Political Science at Stanford. He has also worked for the Defense Policy Team in the Bureau of Political-Military Affairs for the United States Department of State and has served as a US-Asia Foreign Policy Analyst, Nathan Hale Foreign Policy Society. He has also conducted independent interview/survey research in Hong Kong regarding youth political activism and censorship post-1997 and has completed interview research in Beijing and Shanghai regarding the future of U.S.-China relations as viewed by China's next generation of leaders. He is interested in diplomacy and international security studies, particularly with regards to U.S. foreign policy in East Asia.

MARCUS WILLENSKY is the Director of the International Research Department (Kokusai Chousa Bu) of FORMULATION K.K. This company provides research and support for the Japanese television industry. Marcus specializes in Film and Video Licensing of overseas footage for broadcast in Japan. He received his B.A. in the winter of 1987 from University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, Department of Asian Studies with a concentration in Burmese [now Myanmar] history and was awarded his M.A. in the fall of 1999 from the University of Michigan, Ann Arbor, in the Center for Japanese Studies with a concentration in Japanese Language. "Japanese Fascism Revisited" was originally Chapter 4 of his graduating thesis, "Sonnou Toukan: Revere the Emperor, Destroy the Traitors." His primary research interest is in early Showa Era history, with special focus on the Japanese prewar right-wing (uyoku).

SEAN FERN will receive his B.S. in Foreign Service (with a major in International Politics) from Georgetown University. Next year he plans on attending Cornell Law School. For this paper, Sean worked closely with Victor Cha, who is an assistant professor of Government at Georgetown's School of Foreign Service. Sean's main research interests include international law and organizations, human rights, and national security. He is currently working on his senior thesis, which is on regime change theory and how it relates to the Internet.

YUN-JO CHO latest position was most recently as an intern at the International Atomic Energy Agency. He earned his B.S. in Foreign Service in May 2004, majoring in International Political Economy with a certificate in Asian Studies, from the Walsh School of Foreign Service, Georgetown University. His article is a condensed version of his undergraduate thesis written during his senior year. His academic interests include democratization in East Asia and ROK-DPRK economic integration.

MIN-DONG PAUL LEE is pursuing a Ph.D. in Political Science at Cornell University. He received his B.A. with honors in 1996 and his M.A. in 2000, both from the University of Toronto in 1996 and his MA from the same school in 2000. He is currently working on China's education inequality, which also touches upon differential educational attainment between minority ethnic groups. Writing of his article was partly supported by the University of Toronto Fellowship. His primary field of study is economic sociology and social stratification. He is particularly interested in the role of education in producing social and economic inequality.

TAI-WEI LIM is completing his Ph.D. at Cornell University in the Marion and Frank Long Fellow, Peace Studies Program. He has also been an Overseas Research Fellow at the Singapore Institute of International Affairs, a Hong Kong Policy Research Institute Fellow and a Tan Kah Kee Foundation Sub-committee member. He received his B.A. from the National University of Singapore, with a major in Political Science and Japanese Studies with a minor in History, and also received an M.A. in Japanese Studies (Political Economy) from the National University of Singapore in 2001. He has also worked extensively for NGOs and has given speeches, interviews and been published widely on pressing issues in East and Southeast Asia. His research interests include China's oil industry, ASEAN relationship with China and Japan, and East Asian regionalism.

ANDREW D. HALL is a senior at Georgetown University's School of Foreign Service. He expects to graduate in May 2005 with a Bachelor's Degree in Foreign Service and a Certificate in European Studies with a concentration on the European Union. His major is International Politics with a concentration in International Security Studies. His piece was written while spending the 2003/04 academic year abroad at King's College London, part of the University of London in their War Studies Department. Andrew's main academic interests are in international law and security studies as well as Europe and Southeast Asia; he plans on a career in the U.S. Foreign Service.