

SJEAA CONTRIBUTERS

BENJAMIN KOSTRZEWA is a second-year student at the University of Washington School of Law. He holds a B.A. from George Washington University, where he majored in East Asian studies and minored in Chinese. His main academic interests are Chinese legal reform and the enforcement of Chinese laws, particularly in the countryside. He is currently working on an article entitled “CIETAC in 2006: New Rules, Same Results?” to be published in the Pacific Rim Law and Policy Journal in March, 2006.

TZU-I CHUANG is currently a Ph.D. student at the University of Washington, in the Department of Anthropology. Her contribution to this issue, a paper analyzing Taiwanese femininity and the culture of cuteness, is an updated and abridged version of her M.A. thesis, written at Columbia University.

KENJI KUSHIDA is a Ph.D. student in the Political Science Department at the University of California, Berkeley. He received two B.A. degrees, in Economics and East Asian Studies (2001), and an M.A., in East Asian Studies (2003), from Stanford University. He has been involved in the ICT Competition Policy Research group sponsored by the Stanford Japan Center-Research since 2004. He has written several articles on Japan’s telecommunications sector, and is currently managing IT-related projects through the Berkeley Roundtable on the International Economy (BRIE). His dissertation in progress focuses on the role of foreign direct investment in Japan’s political economy.

JACOB R. BROWN is a senior attending the University of Washington. He will graduate in June 2006 with a B.A. in International Studies. Although broadly interested in security studies in the Asia-Pacific region and US-Japanese relations, his main research interests lie in the politics of the Israel-Palestine conflict. He is writing his senior thesis on Jewish-Arab coexistence narratives in Haifa, Israel. The research for Jacob’s paper on the future of the US-Japanese military alliance was conducted as part of the Task Force program of the Henry M. Jackson School of International Studies at the University of Washington, which simulates the production of a policy brief prepared for the Secretary of State on a matter deemed critical to US foreign interests. He has also worked as a research assistant to professors studying the Japanese space program and space diplomacy.

DANIEL K. JUNG graduated from the University of Washington in June 2005 with a B.A. in International Studies.
