
JASON CHEN is a junior at Stanford University and expects to graduate in 2006 with a B.A. in International Relations and an M.A. in International Policy Studies. He was a Policy Analyst Intern at the Institute for National Policy Research last summer. His research interests are on East Asian regional security and American foreign policy.

CARA D. CUTLER received her LL.M. in Asian and Comparative Law from the University of Washington School of Law in 2005, her J.D., with honors, from the University of Connecticut School of Law in 2004, and her B.A., cum laude, from Connecticut College in 2001, where she majored in Chinese Language & Literature and Sociology. She is a member of the New York bar, and is currently a Judicial Law Clerk at the Seattle Immigration Court, Office of the Chief Immigration Judge, Executive Office for Immigration Review. Any opinion expressed in her article are the author's own and do not reflect the official position or views of the United States Department of Justice, the Executive Office for Immigration Review, Office of the Chief Immigration Judge, or the Seattle Immigration Court.

KENJI HASEGAWA is currently pursuing his Ph.D. in History at Stanford University. He earned his BA at Keio University in 1999, and has been a Lecturer on Modern Japanese History at the Yokohama National University International Student Center since 2003. He is currently writing his dissertation on student radicalism in postwar Japan.

AMEE PATEL is a senior majoring in political science at Davidson College and will graduate this May with honors. He worked on his article with Shelley Rigger, Associate Professor of Political Science at Davidson, and is currently writing an honors thesis on the political consequences of regional economic integration in the developing world. His main interests are in international political economy and development, particularly in South Asia. He will be joining the management consulting firm McKinsey & Company after graduation.

SJEAA
CONTRIBUTERS

MICHAEL A. PARELES is a junior at the University of Chicago, majoring in History and East Asian Studies. He is interested in historical and contemporary questions on human rights in the People's Republic of China, with a particular focus on migrant labor, criminal justice reform and ethnic minority rights. Pareles received a grant from the University of Chicago Human Rights Program, without which he could not have furthered his research. Pareles's last publication was a report on work injuries in the Pearl River Delta for China Labor Watch (chinalaborwatch.org).

TODD MACEGAN WEST is currently an Adjunct Instructor in Sociology at the University of Georgia at Gwinnett, and will earn his Ph.D. in International Affairs this spring. He received his B.A. from Elon College in 2000, and an M.A. from Georgia Southern University in 2002 in Sociology. For his article, he conducted qualitative (open-ended) interviews in the summer of 2005 with retired military and government officials in Beijing, China regarding the 1979 Sino-Vietnamese Conflict. His primary research interests are in East Asian politics and culture, and American foreign policy. He has traveled through East Asia, has worked in Osaka, Japan, and is fluent in both Chinese and Japanese.

SEANON S. WONG is currently a business consultant at Booz Allen Hamilton in Shanghai. He received his B.A. in Political Science and M.A. in International Relations from the University of Chicago in June 2004, and was awarded by the Hopkins-Nanjing Center the following year a Graduate Certificate in Chinese and American Studies. He was an American delegate for the Forum for American/Chinese Exchange at Stanford in 2005. His article "Economic Statecraft across the Strait: Business Influence in Taiwan's Mainland Policy" was published in Asian Perspective the same year. His current research interests include international relations theory, Chinese foreign relations, and culture and identity under globalization.
